Interpersonal - This is a direct, written, or oral communication that occurs between two or more persons. The oral form of this type of communication, such as dialogue or a conversation between two or more people, is personal and direct, and permits maximum interaction through words and gestures.

Organizational - Communication serves as an instrument to measure the success or growth of an organization. The success of an organization is recognized by the quality of information flowing through its personnel. In today’s business enterprises, information must flow faster than ever before. Even a little delay might cause a great loss. In large organizations, to keep oneself informed about the smooth operation of the various departments and for performing excellently in the market, it is essential for a professional, who plays a key role in the organization, to know and understand the different forms of communication that constitute the network in an organization.

Mass - This is generally identified with tools of modern mass media, which include books, the press, cinema, television, radio, the Internet, etc. It is a means of conveying messages to an entire populace. This also includes the speeches delivered by a prophet or a political leader.

Intrapersonal – Talking to self; introspecting; retrospecting

Extra-personal – talking to non-human things e.g. talking to your pet dog, cat; talking to moon etc.